Marc Andreessen...

“By 2034, the traditional 9-to-5 job will become obsolete, ushering in an era where work as we know it may no longer be necessary for survival or comfort.”

Marc Lowell Andreessen is an American businessman and former software engineer. He is the co-author of Netscape, the first widely used web browser with a graphical user interface. Co-founder of Netscape, and co-founder and general partner of Silicon Valley venture capital firm Andreessen Horowitz. He co-founded and later sold the software company Opsware to Hewlett-Packard; he also co-founded King, a company that provides a platform for social networking websites. He is an inductee in the World Wide Web Hall of Fame. Andreessen's net worth is estimated at $1.7 billion.

Artificial Intelligence Impact

“Medical robots will go inside our brain and connect our neo-cortex to the smart cloud by the year 2029.” –Dr. Ray Kurzweil

But dismiss Ray Kurzweil's predictions at your own peril: he's seldom wrong. When it comes to technology he's gone on the record with hundreds of predictions—while—what futurists do, and he's correct over 90 percent of the time.
